Case Study: College Resin Floors

Brief Description

Quest were contacted by a main contractor and asked to tender for works on a public sector project within a college facility. This included installation of a resin flooring based system for an engineering workshop.

Overview

After initial contact, Quest put forward a tender and the order was accepted 4 weeks ahead of the programmed start date, which allowed for thorough planning to take place in order to ascertain the best flooring solution for the environment the end user specified to the main contractor. Altrotect Plus was specified by Quest as the best solution for the mechanical engineering space incorporating a 3 part system (one part DPM primer and two parts resin coating) which would provide a surface in line with the end users specifications.

Quest then met with the client to present the selected system to explain that it would provide a hard wearing, easy to clean and long lasting surface that would reflect the lighting in the space to give a much brighter feel to the environment. This was met with approval by the client and the system was approved for the project.

The entire project was programmed for one week but Quest finished in just 5 days; with all materials for the 1000m2 floor delivered at once from a single production in order to ensure no shade variations in the surface.

Both the main contractor and end user were very happy with the results of the final installation, due in large part to the work being completed ahead of programmed time and on budget and the floor is now used by the engineers of the future in the college today!
